Thirty Two is a documentary about a Chinese comfort woman and her half-Japanese son from rape. Local women were recruited for the new comfort stations in China, particularly after the Rape of Nanking; however, there were concerns that they would not want to serve in the comfort stations, even when offered payment. As the comfort station system expanded during World War II, this basic three-part structure remained consistent throughout the Pacific. WanttoReadsaving... In reality, they wished to restore the national pride, tired of being criticized by neighbouring countries. Onozawapp. InAprilattherequestoftheKoreanCouncil,theKimDaeJunggovernmentapp officials have attempted to deny or shift responsibility in a number of ways--for example, by claiming that the comfort women were volunteers, working for private operators, over whom the military maintained only limited supervision.
