The book is written in language meant to reach both the informed general reader and archaeologists thus I have avoided professional jargon as much as possible. Major rulers occupied a palace; residences of lesser rulers were not considered palaces. WanttoReadCurrentlyReadingRead. The single Jaredite mention of elephants in the third millennium BC corresponds with paleontological discoveries that mastodons survived in certain environments in the Americas as late as BC or even later, long past the supposed date of extinction of those animals. Various versions have been published of a surviving fragment of what Anthon saw. And Larry Poulson's work on Limhi's explorers strikes me as a particularly good correlation.

The breadth of his work and the remarkable timespan that work covers may never is not the kind of thing that you can use to beat someone into submission with, given that anyone can say "So what?"
