Two pilots – ideally one in life sciences and one in humanities or social sciences – with society publishers to look at their publication costs and revenue model, to explore whether any of the alternative publishing options might be viable, and to understand what would be needed in practice to implement. To save costs, many learned society publishers may feel forced to move fully online and yet receipt of print copies is often a key member benefit offered to Society members. In order to ensure clarity of costs for all funding participants, article numbers are sometimes capped which can cause problems for publishers whose titles are growing organically as they increase their appeal to researchers.
