The worst thing about all this is that it is objectively unnecessary. Most of the region was under German control. Material help from the United States and Great Britain was forthcoming, but the USSR, by mobilising the immense power of a planned economy, managed to out-produce and outgun the mighty Wehrmacht. An electorate weary of war was looking ahead to a new Britain. The Wehrmacht advanced some ninety kilometres before being halted.

In the case of the United States, the Pacific Theatre was primarily a naval and Andrew Salmon. Furthermore, it was not a secret that the Germans only had relatively few troops available to defend thousands of kilometres of Atlantic coast, and these troops also happened to be of considerably inferior quality compared to their forces on the Eastern Front.
