It was 16 years ago that Torrey Harder and I met at the bench to commemorate and memorialize his parents that Torrey ventured the idea of constructing an event that would bring together the English Department and Cornell Plantations. He was definitely a dreaded "soul," but Lady Sackville liked him, and so did Vita. Cornell English professor Molly Hite guides us over the peaks of their powerful relationship and the works it inspired in Woolf: the renowned materialist-feminist essay, "A Room of One's Own"; the faux-biography and parody of literary history, "Orlando"; and Woolf's most experimental and perhaps greatest novel, "The Waves," in which a detailed representation of a romantically wild garden expands into a whole world.
